Biographical/Historical Sketch

The Stephen N. Dwight Building is considered to be the first all-steel framed building in Kansas City. Located at 1004 Baltimore Avenue, the building was designed by Charles A. Smith and originally had seven floors. Its first owner, Stephen N. Dwight, was well known for his real estate investments around the city. In 1927, three more floors were added to the top of the building. It was renovated in 2002.

Scope and Content Note

This collection contains renovation building plans for the Stephen N. Dwight Building. Included are floor plans, drawings of exterior corners, columns, and the original staircase, a longitudinal section, and a grade plan. The plans are dated December 1969 and April 4, 1970 and signed by Stephen Carter.
