Historical Sketch

The First National Bank of Kansas City was founded in 1886 when James Lewis Lombard and Colonel James L. Abernathy combined their resources to turn a private bank into a national bank charter. The bank opened in a rental space in the Junction Building at 9th and Main Streets, but then moved to the Heist Building at 8th and Main.
in 1891. By 1906 a new building, designed by the architect firm of Wilder and Wight, was built for the bank at 10th and Baltimore. This building was expanded and remodeled several times, including a large addition north of the main building designed by the architect firm Marshall and Brown and completed in 1964. The bank also rented two floors of the Ten Main Center building to the east in 1968 and then additional floors in 1980. In 1985 First National Bank merged with Boatmen’s Bank and Trust Company and CharterBank Ward Parkway, and became Boatmen’s First National Bank of Kansas City. In 1999 the bank reorganized under Bank of America and moved its main branch to 1200 Main Street.

Scope and Content Note

This collection contains records of the bank’s organization, property holdings, building plans, and daily business from its founding to shortly after its reorganization as Boatmen’s First National Bank in 1985. The items in this collection document part of the company’s history, but are not a complete record of the First National Bank of Kansas City. Smaller donations of First National Bank material are compiled into SC202 Bank Collection.

This series consists of materials related to the bank’s incorporation, building and property, and news and history. Items in this series are arranged by type of record and thereunder chronologically.
